Dissolution of the 44th Parliament

Ottawa, Ontario – March 23, 2025

Today, Her Excellency the Governor General, at the recommendation of the Prime Minister, issued a proclamation to dissolve the 44th Parliament. The general election will be held on Monday, April 28, 2025.

Effects of dissolution on the House

The House ceases to exist as an assembly at the time of dissolution.

While prorogation on Monday, January 6, 2025, terminated all incomplete government business, dissolution now also puts an end to all Private Members' Business. The government's obligation to respond to petitions or to produce papers requested by the House also ends with dissolution.

The government must wait until the new Parliament is in session before tabling any document that is required pursuant to an act, a resolution or a standing order.

Effects of dissolution on committees

At prorogation, committees had ceased to exist, with all orders of reference expired and all committee chairs and vice-chairs relieved of their duties. This continues in a dissolution until the House reconstitutes them following the election.

With a dissolution, the government is no longer required to provide responses to committee reports that have been requested.
